Chapter 1 by LiamLeblanc13

The world means nothing. After the plague, all the animal species died out, and our ecosystem collapsed. Our Earth has fallen into disrepair and disregard.

But, I, a 12 year old orphan, believe there is still hope. And yet it comes from the most unlikely source. The Wall. It is huge and impossible to scale, and has been up all my life.

I remember, when I was young, I managed to climb the tallest tree in Sector 4. I was able to see over the wall. And what I saw was incredible. I saw lush, green, forests, raging rivers, animals, and plants.

Ever since, I have dreamed of scaling the wall. And now, I have decided I will.

All I have to do is scale an unscalable wall.

Gee, this shouldn't be hard at all.

She stopped clutching her throat and coughed, I could see she was an asthmatic " I'm so sorry I didn't mean to frighten you I was only seeing if you were..."

"I was?" the girl stopped coughing and looked me in the face.

"Are you trying to climb the wall too?" I asked nervously.

"What's it got to do with you?" She grumbled and turned away.

"Because actually I'm trying to climb it to get to the other side and I was wondering if we should go together, but obviously not on your point of view."

"That's not what I meant, I...I... I don't want anyone to know about it, they wouldn't approve and then they would know I couldn't be trusted so I would have boundaries." The girl said looking at me again. " So we should go now rather than when everyone's awake shouldn't we?" The girl smiled as they walked towards the wall to try and start their new life.

Chapter 3 by Shadow_Star

While trying to climb the wall someone was awoken by sounds of birds and saw them climbing the wall. He chased after them but they were already over the wall. He told the guards but nobody went after them. "Finally I got over the wall". "You got over the wall!" She said as she angrily walked away. "That not what I meant! Wait come back!" Why should I you clearly don't want me here." She said as she turned around. Of course I want you here! The girl smiled and walked away for the wall.

Chapter 4 by lumberjack_writes

I dashed up to the wall and gazed at it. THINK. 'How should I go about telling my friends... Wait, I'm a loner!' I think silently to myself. If that girl wasn't going to try, I sure was. But not today. Alright.. I'll do it soon.. I am determined to see a deer again. I love those little creatures. White spots, white tail bottom, hopping around like it's nobody's business. Which it wasn't. I'll scale the wall for the deer. For the does, and the calves. I'll do it for nature. To get out of this dump. LET'S DO IT.

Under-standing looks to the mind of the reader to see what the words may mean some other day. Being silent is more effective.

Now, they were under surveillance day and night. They were put into a compound all by themselves, and anytime they went out a guard had to follow them.

It was so humiliating, and people stared and avoiding them, that they mostly stayed inside there dome.

Over time, they began to feel depressed and worthless. It was as if the whole community now viewed them as having a contagious disease without a cure.

No one would talk or play with them. It was slowly becoming unbearable. They began to realize that they could not handle this sort of treatment much longer, and started scheming...

Chapter 7 by -

The nights came sooner now, and deeper. Tonight, the stars were shielded by stormy clouds. The two girls were huddled in their dome shivering. It was cold and they had no blankets.

They had finally decided on a plan. They would creep out tonight. Since it was exceptionally chilly, if they were caught, they would say that they were looking for something to keep warm with. It was not unusual for the people here to do that.

And so out they crept. Over the past few months they had been collecting things for their escape. They hid the items under their clothes. As they walked along in the biting wind, they realized how lucky they were to pick this night. No one was around, the town seemed deserted.

Step by step they came closer to The Wall. To freedom. Until they could reach out and touch the cement did they let out their breathe.

A light suddenly appeared above them. They had to act fast. Just as they hoisted their bodies up, someone grabbed their legs and hissed. "Wait!"

Chapter 6 by -

The girls were thankful that he had come along, because he helped them in many ways to get up the tremendous wall.

After many laborious hours, as the first rays of the sun pushed through the early morning clouds, the three climbers reached the top.

From there, it was pretty easy. They just jimmied down, and besides landing on their backs in a muddy creek, it went smoothly.

It was only once they took off all their gear and began looking around, did they think they had reached safety.

But they couldn't have been farther from the truth...

There was actually a reason for that wall. One that many years before had been figured out. It was during the day, when strange creatures would crawl out from their underground homes. To seek out life, flesh, and blood.
